The proposition "Prof." is fraguently actioned when indicating locations and control of the proposition of the property of property of the p	Layer	Lang	Feature ID	Interpretation	Detection				Fuzzing
Notinguesian Noti	Layei	Lang	r cature ID	-	Acc.	F1	Prec.	Rec.	Acc.	F1	Prec.	Rec.
The highlighted lackers are privarily function words, seamons ansfares, and irropherous in Petrugueses and related languages, midulating strikes, correlations, prepositions, and endings that from recounts, algarities, or verifications, prepositions, and endings that from recounts, algarities, or verifications, prepositions, and endings that from recounts, algarities, or verifications, prepositions, and endings that control of the petrugues and some manufacture and meaning, often marking generating from the property of	model.layers.0.mlp	Portuguese	128645	location, time, or context within a noun phrase, often specifying	0.59	0.33	0.91	0.20	0.56	0.24	0.88	0.14
Suffices, and morphemes in Portrugueses and related languages, modellayers and including articles, conjunctions, perpositions, and endings that form rooms, adjustives, or verb conjugations. These elements are essential form rooms, adjustives, or verb conjugations. These elements are essential for grammatical activates such as gooder, marking granters, community and present in Portrugueses (and some in other languages), other marking grammatical activates such as gooder, mustices, or elements in Portrugueses, and some in other languages, other marking grammatical activates such as gooder, mustices, or elements in Portrugueses, or elements in Portrugueses, and some in other languages. #### Portruguese 129688 Portruguese 131888 #### Portruguese 131888 Port
modeLlayers.2.mip Portuguese 51039 modeLlayers.2.mip Portuguese 51039 modeLlayers.3.mip Portuguese 295688 modeLlayers.3.mip Portuguese 235688 modeLlayers.3.mip Portuguese 236022 modeLlayers.3.mip Portuguese	model.layers.2.mlp
Some nouse, adjectives, or verte conjugations. These elements are seemfal for grammatical software gener marking elements are seemfal for grammatical software gener marking elements, modellayers, after the production of the pr essential for guaramatical structure and meanings, often turnking gender, number, come, or encountering phrases, suffices, or short word fragments in Portugues (and some in other languages), often marking guaramatical features such as gender, murber, tense, or formular part of proper nounal and common in the context of Romance languages). The highlighted skews are prefundly implements, suffices, or suffice in multiple languages, often marking guaramatical features such as gender, murber, tense, or formular oad meaning in the context of Romance languages. The highlighted skews are morphenes, word roots, or affices in multiple languages, often marking guaramatical features such as tense, case, cased, or, or puriously or formular of proper nouns and place are importance in word formulation and meaning in the context of th		Portuguese	51039		0.65	0.56	0.76	0.44	0.52	0.50	0.52	0.48
The highlighted tokens are primarily morphemes, suffixes, or short word fragments in Portuguese (and some in other languages), often marking guarantaical flatures such as gender, model.layers.3.mlp				· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · short word fragments in Portuguese and some in other languages, olter marking grammatical features such as gender, mmher, tense, or forming part of proper nouns and common words. Many are accounted characters or endings that are important for word formation and meaning in the context of Romane characters or endings that are important for word formation and meaning in the context of Romane characters or endings that are important for word formation and meaning and the context of Romane characters or endings that are important for word formation and meaning appear at word boundaries or within compound words, reflecting their importance in word formation and meaning across diverse liquidities contexts. The highlighted tokens are primarily morphenes, suffices, or nots within words in Portuguese (and some Spaniek, Russian, and English of the marking werb conjugations, noun-adjective endings, or forming part of proper means and place names. The segments are finguistically significant for indiction. The highlighted tokens are common morphemes, suffices, or indiction, derivation, or described in the biographics. The highlighted dokens are common morphemes, suffices, or indictional endings in Portuguese, often marking and in unbut. These elements are curied for word formation and canning in the biographics. The highlighted dokens are common morphemes, suffices, or indictional endings in Portuguese, often marking and in the biographics. The highlighted tokens are prodominately morphemes, suffices, or indictional endings in Portuguese, often marking the country rance (Paraphi) and is derivative survey and in the biographics. The highlighted tokens are prodominately morphemes, suffices, or indictional endings in Portuguese words often marking the country rance (Paraphi) and is derivative survey and the start middle, or or do words and are crucial for word formation and meaning in the biographics words often marking very companies and marking the portuguese words, often marking very companies and marking the portugue model.layers.3.mlp Portuguese 129688 maguages), often marking grammatical features such as gender, model.layers.4.mlp Portuguese 51358 modified layers.4.mlp Portuguese 51358 model.layers.4.mlp Portuguese 51358 model.layers.4.mlp Portuguese 51358 model.layers.4.mlp Portuguese 51358 model.layers.5.mlp Portuguese 51358 model.layers.5.mlp Portuguese 51358 model.layers.5.mlp Portuguese 7250 model.layers.5.mlp Portuguese 7250 model.layers.5.mlp Portuguese 7250 model.layers.5.mlp Portuguese 7250 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 7250 mo Model.layers.3.mlp				_ · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·
words. Many are accented characters or endings that are apportunate for word from the context of Romance languages. The highlighted tokens are merphenes, word roots or affixes in multiple languages, often marking grammatical features such as especies, case, gender, or planulisty, of forming part of proper nouns and place names. These tokens frequently appear at word boundaries or within compound words, reflecting their mportance in word formation and meaning across diverse languistic contexts. The highlighted tokens are primarily morphemes, suffixes, or roots within words in Portuguesca, cand some Spanish, Russian, derivation, or identification of entities. The highlighted tokens are common morphemes, suffixes, or roots within words in Portuguesca, of the marking words origination, control adjective endings, of forming part of proper names and place names. The highlighted tokens are common morphemes, suffixes, profixes, profixes, or intentification of entities. The highlighted tokens are common morphemes, suffixes, profixes, or intentification of entities. The highlighted tokens are common morphemes, suffixes, profixes, or intentification of entities. The highlighted tokens are common morphemes, suffixes, profixes, or intentification of entities. The highlighted tokens are common morphemes, suffixes, profixes, or intentification of entities. The highlighted tokens for grammatical gender and number. These elements are crucial for word formation and meaning in the languages and scripts, often marking words, or profixes or suffixed tokens consistently correspond to the morphemes or substraines forming the root or core segment of the word regardless of inguistic context. The highlighted tokens referencing parts at the start, middle, or each of words and are encial for word formation and meaning on the languages words, often marking words or syntactic boundaries such as verb conjugations, nounvalgetive entities, and the start or end of words and words in Portuguese and sorpic in Spanish. French, German, an	model layers 3 mln	Portuguese	120688	1 /	0.60	0.64	0.76	0.56	0.67	0.71	0.63	0.82 model layers 4.mlp Portuguese 51388 model layers 5.mlp Portuguese 52362 The highlighted lokens are morphemes, word roots, or affixes in multiple languages, office those in Sequently appear at word to multiple languages, office forming part of proper nouns and place names. These theories inspending words reflecting their apportung in which place manses. These theories inspending appear at word to boundaries or within compound words, reflecting their apportung in which place manses. These theories inspending appear at word to boundaries or within compound words, reflecting their apportung in which place in marking the root of the standing were originations, nounal dispertive endings, or forming part of proper names and place names. The highlighted lokens are primarily morphemes, suffixes, or coots within words in Portugueses (and some Spanish, Russian, derivation, or destiliations of entities). These segments are unjustically significant for indication, derivation, or destiliations of entities. The highlighted lokens are continue prophemes, suffixes, prefixes, or indications, and the suggestion of the suggest	model.layers.3.mlp	Portuguese	129688		0.09	0.04	0.70	0.50	0.07	0.71	0.03	0.82
Nonance languages. The highlighted tokens are morphemes, word roots, or affixes in multiple languages, often marking grammatical fastures such as seek, ease, ease, case, copeding, or plurality, or forming part of proper nous and place names. These takens frequently appear at word multiple languages, often marking the proper nous and place names. These takens frequently appear at word such as the importance in word formation and meaning across diverse languages in word formation and meaning across diverse languages. Portuguese				, model.layers.4.mip Portuguese 51558 model.layers.4.mip Portuguese 51588 model.layers.4.mip Portuguese 51588 model.layers.5.mip Portuguese 51698 Fortuguese 51788 model.layers.4.mip Portuguese 51898 model.layers.4.mip Portuguese 51898 model.layers.5.mip Portuguese 51898 model.layers.5.mip Portuguese 51898 model.layers.5.mip Portuguese 51898 The highlighted tolkens are proton morphemes, suffixes, or roots within words in Portuguese (and same Spanish, Russian, and making werb cougnisations, nour-adjective remaining for the morphemes, suffixes, or roots within making werb cougnisations, nour-adjective remaining for the making werb cougnisations, nour-adjective remaining in the language. The highlighted tolkens are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tolkens are requested for making werb cougnisations, or adjective and making werb cougnisations, mouradjective forms, or grammatical agender and number. These elements are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tolkens are predominantly murphemes, affixes, or roots with morphemes or substraing forming the country name ("Brazill" and selective addings, and series), after marking grammatical, semantic, or synactic boundaries and such as verb conjugations, nour-adjective forms, or grammatical semantic, or synactic boundaries and as verb conjugations, nour-adjective remains, and common preference or substrainty grammatical, semantic, or synactic boundaries and as verb conjugations, nour-adjective candings, and common prefixes or strikes, or suffixes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words, and are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tolkens are predominantly merphenes, affixes, or suffixes or suffixes. These segments frequently appear at morphomers or suffixes. These segments frequently appear at morphomers and an admitted proton with Portuguese words, often marking verb complications, nour-adjective forms, or commo tense, case, gander, or plurality, or forming part of proper nouse place and			51358 model.layers.4.mlp Portuguese 51358 and place names. These rokens frequently appear at word houndaries or within compound words, reflecting their importance in world formation and meaning across diverse linguistics contexts. The highlighted tokens are primarily morphemes, suffixes, or roots within words in Portuguese (and some Spanish, Russian, derivation, or dentification of entities. The highlighted tokens are primarily morphemes, suffixes, or roots within words in Portuguese (and some Spanish, Russian, derivation, or dentification of entities. The highlighted tokens are common morphemes, suffixes, or reflexe, or inflectional endings in Portuguese, after marking where the inquisited preder and number. These elements are crucial for word formation and maintain in the language. The highlighted tokens are common morphemes, suffixes, or root segments within Portuguese across multiple languages and scripts, often marking the root or core segment of the word regardless of inquisite context. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, affixes, or root segments within Portuguese words, often marking grammatical, semantic, or syntactic boundaries such as verb conjugations, nound-aglective forms, and common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middles, and common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middles, and common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middles, and common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middles, and common morphemes. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or some of o'words, reflecting morphological structure and infectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or some of o'words, or and are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or some of o'words, reflecting morphological structure and infectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens a houndaries or within compound words, reflecting their importance in word formation and meaning across diverse linguistic contexts. The highlighted tokens are primarily morphemes, suffixes, or routs within words in Portuguese (and some Spanish, Russian, and English), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, noun/adjective forms, noun-adjective forms, noun-adjective forms, or grammatical gender and number. These segments are linguistically significant for inflection, derivation, or identification of entitles. The highlighted tokens are common morphemes, suffixes, prefixes, or implicational endings in Portuguese, of the marking verb conjugations, noun-adjective forms, or grammatical gender and number. These elements are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens somestently correspond to the morphemes or substrings forming the country name "Bruzili" and its derivatives across multiple languages and scripts, often marking transfight for cort core segments of the word regardless of linguistic context. The highlighted tokens consistently correspond to the morphemes or substrings forming the country name "Bruzili" and its derivatives across multiple languages and scripts, often marking grammatical, semantic, or syntactic bundaries such as werb conjugations, nounded elever endings, and common prefixes or suffixes. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, affixes, or rout segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or only one of the word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes of words in Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noundajective forms, or cummon morphemes, affixes of words in Portuguese words often marking verb conjugations, noundajective forms, or cummon morphemes, tools, or delivery in the language. The highlighted tokens are preforminantly tenses, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugat	1 1 1 4 1	D (0.56	0.62	0.54	0.74	0.52	0.67	0.52	0.06 importance in word formation and meaning across diverse linguistic contexts. The highlighted tokens are primarily morphemes, suffixes, or roots within words in Portuguese (and sure Spanish, Russian, dinglish), often marking verb conjugations, noun-diglective endings, or forming part of proper names and place names. The significant for indirection, derivation, or identification of entities. The segments are linguistically significant for indirection, derivation, or identification of entities. The highlighted tokens are primarily morphemes, suffixes, or reflectional endings in Portuguese, often marking verb conjugations, noun-diglective forms, or grammatical gender and number. These elements are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily morphemes, suffixes, or reflectional endings in Portuguese, often marking verb conjugations, noun-diglective forms, or grammatical gender and marking the root or core segment of the word regardless of linguistic context. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, suffixes, or root segments within Portuguese words, often marking and the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, affixes, or soft segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun-diglective forms, or common morphemes, affixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun-diglective forms, or common morphemes, affixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun-diglective forms, or common morphemes, affixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun-diglective forms, or common morphemes, verb conjugations, noun-diglective forms, or common morphemes, verb conjugations, noun-diglective forms, or common morphemes, verb conjugations, noun-digle	model.layers.4.mlp	Portuguese			0.56	0.63	0.54	0./4	0.53	0.67	0.52	0.96 model.layers.4.mlp Portuguese 63167 The highlighted to fokens are primarily morphemes, suffixes, or roots within words in Portuguese (and some Spanish, Russian, and English), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective endings, or forming part of proper names and place names. These segments are linguistically significant for inflection, derivation, or identification of entires. The highlighted to fokens are common morphemes, suffixes, or roots eignigations, noun/adjective forms, or grammatical gender and number. These clements are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted to keens are multiple languages and scripts, often marking words or or core segments or core segments of the word regardless of linguistic context. The highlighted to keens are predominantly morphemes, affixes, or root segments within Portuguese words, often marking grammatical, semantic, or syntactic boundaries such as verb conjugations, noun/adjective endings, and common prophemes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or conditional marking grammatical, semantic, or syntactic boundaries such as verb conjugations, noun/adjective endings, and common prefixes or suffixes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or sterms within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or sterms within Portuguese (and some in Spanish), french, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place anness. These steems frequently appear at memphome boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nous or locations, reflecting the morpholo				1
The highlighted tokens are primarily morphemes, sulfixes, or roots within woords in Portuguese (and some Spanish, Russian, and English), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective endings, or forming part of proper names and place names. These segments are linguistically significant for inflection, derivation, or identification of calities. The highlighted tokens are common morphemes, sulfixes, prefixes, or inflectional endings in Portuguese, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or grammatical gender and number. These elements are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are common morphemes, sulfixes, prefixes, or inflectional endings in Portuguese, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or grammatical gender and number. These elements are crucial for word formation and meaning in the languages. The highlighted tokens consistently correspond to the morphemes across multiple languages and scripts, often marking the root or core segment of the word regardless of linguistic context. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, affixes, or root segments within Portuguese words, often marking the start, middle, or end of words and are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, nouns'adjective contings, and common profixes or suffixes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, nouns'adjective forms, or common morphemes. These eigenents frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems				1 ° model.layers.4.mlp Portuguese 63167 and English), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective endings, or forming part of proper names and place names. These segments are linguistically significant for inflection, derivation, or identification of entities. The highlighted tokens are common morphemes, suffixes, prefixes, or inflectional endings in Portuguese, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or grammatical gender and number. These elements are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are consistently correspond to the morphemes substrings forming the country name "Brazil" and its derivatives across multiple languages and susprise, often marking the root or core segment of the word regardless of impulsive context. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, alliexs, or root segments within Portuguese words, often marking paramatical, semantic, or syntactic boundaries such as verb conjugations, noun/adjective endings, and common prefixes or suffixes. These segments within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noundardjective forms, or common morphemes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noundardjective forms, or common morphemes, suffixes or demonstrative and multilinguage. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noundardjective forms, or ending the start, middle, or and of words, and are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noundardjective forms, or allies of words in Portuguese words in Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noundardjective forms, or allies of words in Portuguese words in Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noundardjective forms, or allies of words in Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noundard model.layers.4.mip Portuguese 23602 endings. or forming part of proper names and place names. These segments are linguistically significant for inflection, derivation, or identification of entities. The hisplighted tokens are common morphemes, suffixes, prefixes, or inflectional endings in Portuguese, often marking werb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or grammatical gender and number. These elements are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The hisplighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, suffixes, or root segments within Portuguese words, often marking grammatical, semantic, or syntactic boundaries such as verbeoning in the language. The hisplighted tokens are predominantly prefixes or suffixes, or root segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words, and morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or segments in the language. The hisplighted tokens are predominantly prefixes or suffixes or suffixes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and millertonal patterns in the language. The hisplighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The hisplighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in mitriword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multimorphemes, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and mul model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 23602 model.layers.7.mlp Portuguese 24987 model.layers.8.mlp Portuguese 25987 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 27987 The highlighted tokens are predominantly proffxes, suffixes, or conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese words, often marking word forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese words, often marking word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese words, often marking word formation inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the startucture and multilingual context of the text. The high	model lavers 4 mln	Portuguese	63167	1	0.72	0.74	0.70	0.78	0.59	0.69	0.56	0.90 model.layers.7.mlp Portuguese 23602 The highlighted tokens are common morphemes, suffixes, prefixes, or inflectional endings in Portuguese, often marking verb conjugations, noun'adjective forms, or grammatical gender and number. These elements are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens consistently correspond to the morphemes or substrings forming the country name ("Brazili" and its derivatives across multiple languages and scripts, often marking the root or core segment of the word regardless of linguistic context. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, affixes, or root segments within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun'adjective endings, and common prefixes or suffixes. These segments frequently appear at the start, or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun'adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun'adjective forms, or common morphemes and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun'adjective forms, or omnon morphemes and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun'adjective forms, or omnon morphemes and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun'adjective forms, or omnon morphemes and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun'adjective forms, or omnon morphemes and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun'adjective forms, or omnon morphemes and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun'adjective forms, or omnon morphemes and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun'adjective forms, or omnon morphemes and Hindi), often markin	ine denial erection	1 0110080000	00107		0172	0., .	01,0	0.70	0.00	0.05	0.00
model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 23602 The highlighted tokens are common morphemes, suffixes, prefixes, or inflectional endings in Portuguese, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or grammatical gender and number. These elements are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens consistently correspond to the morphemes or substrings forming the country name \bar{\text{Pazail}}^{\text{N}} and its derivatives across multiple languages and seripts, often marking the root or core segment of the word regardless of linguistic context. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, affixes, or root segments within Portuguese words, often marking grammatical, semantic, or syntactic boundaries such as verb conjugations, noun/adjective endings, and common prefixes or suffixes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindid), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or noun/adjective forms, on place names. These tokens frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindid), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, on place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and m model.layers.5.mlp Portuguese 23602 prefixes, or inflectional endings in Portuguese, often marking verb conjugations, noun'adjective forms, or grammatical gender and number. These elements are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens consistently correspond to the morphemes or substrings forming the country name \bar{\text{PBazil}}^n and its derivatives across multiple languages and scripts, often marking the root or core segment of the word regardless of linguistic context. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, affixes, or root segments within Portuguese words, often marking grammatical, semantic, or syntactic boundaries such as verb conjugations, noun'adjective endings, and common prefixes or suffixes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun'adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun'adjective forms, or pace names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multimingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments model.layers.5.mlp Portuguese 23602 verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or grammatical gender and number. These elements are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens consistently correspond to the morphemes or substrings forming the country name \"Brazi\"Brazi\" and its derivatives across multiple languages and scripts, often marking the root or core segment of the word regardless of linguistic context. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, affixes, or root segments within Portuguese words, often marking grammatical, semantic, or syntactic boundaries such as verb conjugations, noun/adjective endings, and common prefixes or stems within Portuguese words, often marking in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or semantic, or syntactic boundaries such as verb conjugations, noun/adjective endings, and common prefixes or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflection of the text. The highlighted tokens are pre model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese portuguese model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese portuguese portuguese and its derivatives across multiple languages and scripts, often marking terror or segments of the word regardless of linguistic context. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, affixes, or root segments within Portuguese words, often marking grammartial, semantic, or syntactic boundaries such as verb conjugations, noun/adjective endings, and common prefixes or suffixes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words and are recommon morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morpheme obundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, nots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking words, often marking words or prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking words, not entire the ext. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, nots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, oft	model.layers.5.mlp	Portuguese	23602		0.61	0.42	0.82	0.28	0.56	0.45	0.60	0.36
The highlighted tokens consistently correspond to the morphemes or substrings forming the country name "Brazzil." and its derivatives across multiple languages and serpits, often marking the root or core segment of the word regardless of linguistic context. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, affixes, or root segments within Portuguese words, often marking grammatical, semantic, or syntactic boundaries such as verb conjugations, noun'adjective endings, and common prefixes or suffixes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, affixes, or conjugations, noun'adjective endings, and common prefixes or suffixes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun'adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun'adjective forms, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun'adjective forms, or affixes of words and are true and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking words or late or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking words	•	Torragaese		1 7 7 7 7 7 7 7 7 7 7 7 7 7 7 7 7 7 7 7 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese Model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 118682 morphemes or substrings forming the country name '"Brazil'" and its derivatives across multiple languages and scripts, often marking the root or core segment of the word regardless of linguistic context. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, affixes, or root segments within Portuguese words, often marking grammatical, semantic, or syntactic boundaries such as verb conjugations, noun/adjective endings, and common prefixes or suffixes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindl), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are No.94 No.95 No model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese Portuguese 27857 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese Portuguese 27867 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 27863 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 27864 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 27864 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 27864 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 27864 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 27865 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 27864 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 27865 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 27864 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 27865 model.layers.9.mlp Portugu	model.layers.7.mlp	Portuguese	118682 marking the root or core segment of the word regardless of linguistic context. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, affixes, or root segments within Portuguese words, often marking grammatical, semantic, or syntactic boundaries such as verb conjugations, noun/adjective endings, and common prefixes or suffixes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking words on the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking words on the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking words on the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are					0.56	0.24	0.00	0.14	0.60	0.22	1.00	0.20
model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 27987 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 27987 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 27988 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 27987 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 27988 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 27989 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 27980 model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 3658 model.layers.10.mlp Portuguese 27987 The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start, or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments model.layers.10.mlp Portuguese 3658 model.layers.10.mlp Portuguese 3658 model.layers.10.mlp Portuguese 27987 1.00 1.				1	0.30	0.24	0.00	0.14	0.00	0.55	1.00	0.20
The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, affixes, or root segments within Portuguese words, often marking grammatical, semantic, or syntactic boundaries such as verb conjugations, noun/adjective endings, and common prefixes or suffixes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are				1 model.layers.8.mlp Portuguese 27987 grammatical, semantic, or syntactic boundaries such as verb conjugations, noun/adjective endings, and common prefixes or suffixes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are	model.layers.8.mlp	Portuguese	27987 model.layers.8.mlp Portuguese 27987 conjugations, noun/adjective endings, and common prefixes or suffixes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, or affixes of words often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are suffixes. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are				I~ or end of words and are crucial for word formation and meaning in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are					0.72	0.61	1.00	0.44	0.62	0.54	0.69	0.44 in the language. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, or stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly prefixes, suffixes, wiftin Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 77250 conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or common morphemes. These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are
These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are	model.layers.9.mlp			stems within Portuguese words, often marking verb
These segments frequently appear at the start or end of words, reflecting morphological structure and inflectional patterns in the language. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are		Portuguese	77250	1 7 7 7	0.73	0.65	0.93	0.50	0.69	0.65	0.74	0.58
Ianguage. The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are					0.75	0.02	0.55	0.50	0.03	0.02	0.7.	0.20
The highlighted tokens are primarily stems, roots, or affixes of words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are				1 words in Portuguese (and some in Spanish, French, German, and Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are Hindi), often marking verb conjugations, noun/adjective forms, and ununiforms, noun/adjective forms, noun/adjective forms, and ununiforms, noun/adjective forms, noun/adjective f model.layers.9.mlp Portuguese 99643 or place names. These tokens frequently appear at morpheme boundaries, within inflected or derived forms, and in multiword proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are 0.70 0.75 0.65 0.88 0.67 0.74 0.61 0.96 0.96 0.97 0.74 0.97 0.97 0.98 0.97 0.97 0.97 0.97 0.97 0.97 0.97 0.97			99643	_ ` _ ` proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are proper nouns or locations, reflecting the morphological structure and multilingual context of the text. 0.94 0.94 0.96 0.92 0.93 0.93 0.92 0.94	model.layers.9.mlp	Portuguese			0.70	0.75	0.65	0.88	0.67	0.74	0.61	0.96 and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are and multilingual context of the text. The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are The highlighted tokens are predominantly morphemes, roots, prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are model.layers.10.mlp Portuguese 3658 prefixes, and suffixes within Portuguese words, often marking word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are 0.94 0.94 0.96 0.92 0.93 0.93 0.92 0.94 model.layers.10.mlp Portuguese 3658 word formation, inflection, or derivation. These segments frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are 0.94 0.94 0.96 0.92 0.93 0.93 0.92 0.94 frequently appear at the start, middle, or end of words and are model.layers.10.mlp	Portuguese	3658		0.94	0.94	0.96	0.92	0.93	0.93	0.92	0.94 crucial for constructing meaning, tense, plurality, or grammatical function in the language.												